War Minister Says That Nation Has Taken Second or Third Place Among Powers in Air Strength in a Twelvemonth

(Special to the Monitor)

WESTMINSTER-The question of army aircraft was again debated in the House of Commons recently during the discussion on army votes. The principal speakers on the opposition side were Mr. Lee and Mr. Joynson-Hicks, the latter of whom challenged Colonel Seely to produce even 80 efficient aeroplanes. The challenge was promptly taken up.

Colonel Seely said he could not bring the machines to the honorable gentleman but he could take the honorable gentleman to the machines. They could never get on with the proper discussion of the problem, or with that cooperation between parties which he hoped for, until the absurd suspicion was dispelled that the organization and equipment of the air service was not what it was stated to

In reply Colonel Seely, after describing Mr. Lee's speech as a tissue of aberrations from the truth, and of absurdi ties, went fully into the question of army aircraft. Colonel Seely denied that the government had prohibited the Daily Mail hydroaeroplane competition. That journal had shown great public spirit, for which they were all grateful, in encouraging aeronautics but it was impossible to permit flying over one or two points in the prohibited area. With a view to obtaining the best possible opinion in regard to these reports, a Monitor representative called upon a gentlemen who has always shown himself well versed in Chinese affairs, showed every evidence of being correct, inasmuch as it fell exactly into line with the almost inevitable drift frequently alluded to towards the re-establishment of the democratic principle in China which Yuan Shi Kai had so far departed from.

It is, he went on, really inevitable. The Chinese people have had quite enough of autocracy and they will not tolerate the least sign of a return to it. No doubt, as the Monitor has frequently stated, the Kuo Ming Tang party, at the first sign of a genuine desire on the part of the government to conform their conduct of affairs to the democratic prin ciple, will immediately support them, but until this is done, there will only be opposition. The repudiation of the loan negotiations does not necessarily mean that they will repudiate the loan itself although things being as they are, they quite justified in doing this But the loan has been concluded uncon stitutionally and until this is formally admitted by the other side, there is really no chance of a regular settlement of the

> A literary and scientific college was carried on here for a number ci years, until, having outgrown these quarters, the institution was removed and larger buildings erected in the south end of Burnet Woods park, where the university now stands. The city has continued to add to the resources of the institution, both by way of additional annual income and by buildings and equipments, as they have been needed. The municipal university was thus a development. For many years its function as a city college was only dimly perceived. It was not, it is said, until the present administration of the university came in that the institution found itself as a city college and learned to serve the people and the municipality in the manner which has caused it to become so well known and to be so much appreciated by the people of Cincinnati.

DRESS FOR THE SUMMER OUTING

The applied voke can be omitted

THE blouse dress is thoroughly comfortable, always pretty and generally becoming. The one illustrated combines a blouse that can be drawn into a belt at the waist line or left loose and a five gored skirt that includes just enough plaits to give freedom and which can be made with or without a yoke The blouse is shown on the figure with the applied yoke, but that can be omitted and the collar can be made on a round outline if preferred. The sleeves can be made in three quarter or full length if the short ones are not liked.

This dress is made of white galatea and trimmed with braid, and no material is more satisfactory for such use, but there are many others that are quite correct and quite satisfactory. Linen and pique are good. Pongee is excellent for such a dress, for it is cool and pleasant to wear and it washes well. gee with trimming of brown is always pretty. Blue chambray with white trimming would be pretty, too, and blue or buff colored galatea would make a most serviceable dress.

For the 16-year size, the dress will require 91/4 yards of material 27, 75/8 yards 36 or 51/4 yards 44 inches wide, with 10

BRINGS MONEY

FOR a college girl or a teacher who is still fresh after the school year's work the following method might bring in fair returns and in general a little summer work is excellent for a child:

Being a primary grade teacher, with a long vacation, I decided to have a summer school for little children from 31/2 to 7 years old for a term of eight weeks.

I wrote to several women in my home town, who I thought might be interested in it and also influential in talking it up among their friends, and they sent me a list of names of mothers to whom to write. Without any trouble or advertising I enrolled 20.

The school board gave the use of the primary room for the school. The price was 50 cents a week for each pupil and 50 cents extra for supplies. The hours were from 9 to 11:15 a. m.

Each day we followed about the same program. Nearly every day the pupils had something that they had made to take home with them. The last half hour we took a walk, usually with some definite purpose. -Ladies Home Journal.

"I visited Cradley Heath and found women there working at the force making iron chains, whose wages had just been raised from $1.80 to $2.64 per week. I also visited Nottingham, Lecds, Manchester, London and Birminghani.

Around Birmingham, which is known as the "black country," partly because of the heavy coal smoke which hangs over the region and partly because of the existing labor conditions, I found women brick makers who were striking for an increase in wages. They asked for 10 shillings, or $2.40 per week."

Miss Gillespie was met at the dock by Miss Alma Wisner, her secretary, and Richard Derby, her uncle. She motored to Concord for the day.

Because of the small number of passengers on the Arabic who were destined for Portland, the stop there was cancelled and the liner came direct to Boston, having been intercepted by wire

How Important is Advertising to the Reader?

ME village cobbler in times past simply supplied the people, where he had his shop, with shoes and increased his business by personally calling attention to the merits of the work he did. Today the modern shoe factory, having increased its ability to supply not only the village but a much greater area with shoes, must create a demand faster than can possibly be done by personal solicitation.

the manufacturer can tell many more people the good qualities of his product and sell faster. This advertising, published beside the news of the day, the advertiser hoped by some chance would be seen and then impress its message. Mr. Kahn consented to amendment of his resolution by inserting the words "If GOVERNOR STANDS not compatible with public interest" in the clause "instructing" the attorneygeneral to transmit the papers. WEATHER

UNITED STATES WEATHER BUREAU PREDICTIONS FOR BOSTON AND VICINITY: Unsettled, probably occasional showers tonight or Friday; warmer; light southerly winds.

WASHINGTON—The U. S. weather bursels weather today as follows for ships that must ship showers tonight or Friday; moderate able capacities.

The weather is generally clear in southern districts and cloudy over the rest of the past 24 hours in parts of nearly all northern districts, with heavy rainfall at several points. Temperatures are sometin the West. New England temperatures are sometin the West. New England temperatures from 48 degrees at Eastport to 66 near normal in the Atlantic slope and the southern states and low elsewhere.

This insures reasonably prontable prices, so that the management is now satisfied that if Congress does not change the coastwise shipping laws, which conlines trade between United States ports to American-built vessels, the shippyard will hereafter be reasonably well paynear normal in the Atlantic slope and the southern states and low elsewhere.

NEW YORK-New York operators continued yesterday to hold their spot stocks of turpentine firmly at 39 cents ex-yard, in view of the tecent material reduction in supplies here which has followed an increasing absorption of current arrivals of new crop spirits from the primary centers. A majority of paint makers and other large consumers however, were less inclined to buy than hitherto as they were of the opinion that lower prices will have to be quoted within the near future if receipts continue at the present rate.

AUTOMOBILE AND HORSE ON FARM

NEW YORK-Western grain authorities agree that the auto has not as yet worsted the horse as a supply of farm power. Out of the big oats crop of 1.418. 000,000 bushels of 1912 in the United States, it is estimated that the horse will have consumed 1,400,000,000 bushels leaving a paltry 8,000,000 bushels at the bottom of its bin. The automobile on the farm has probably given the horse a little easier time through dividing labor, so that when pleasure trips are to be taken the horse now rests, while the burden falls on the gasoline tank.

Speculators in oats are not worrying about any big carryover. They have come to realize that any new division of labor in the world's increasing demand for power, which affects the farm as well as the factory, does not as a rule throw anything out of commission that is worth keeping in.

(Special to the Monitor) LONDON-The preliminary round of the Davis cup competition between France and Germany took place at Wiesbaden. Germany was represented by C. Bergmann, F. W. Rahe, O. not play up to their best form, and they found the Germans quite at their best. Kreuzer, a left-handed player who beat Gobert, is capable of defeating the best of opponents, though he is a trifle uncertain. Rahe and Decugis had a splendid struggle which lasted over two hours and a half, the fifth and last being only decided when the score stood at 7-5 in favor of the Frenchman, whose vigorou service gave him the match, though Rahe had been generally expected to win. The doubles produced very fine play. The Frenchman after losing the first two sets made a splendid rally and won the third set, while 16 games were played in the fourth before a definite conclus was reached.

The final result of four matches to one. in favor of Germany, seems a trifle flattering, but there can be no doubt that during the competition the players of that country gave a better exhibition of team of 15 matches to 3. The Light the game than did the Frenchmen.

Single Roses That Are Sought for Beauty

There are more double than single than among the single roses. Yet the number of the latter is considerable, says a writer in Suburban Life. By single roses, I do not altogether mean the simple five petals of the type with yellow stamens in the center. I mean this class and also the semi-double so-called single roses of the tea and kindred classes.

Safrano, Niphetos, Bon Silene, Sombrieul and Killarney are magnificent samples of the so-called single tea roses. They are essentially different from the botanically single roses, their stamens having been partly converted into petals. While the petals are in but two rows, they are thick and broad, smooth like kid and, when folded together, make large, well-formed, and exquisitely tinted buds.

Niphetos for its unusual elongated, ornate and waxen buds; Safrano for its apricot-pinkish creamy combination of colors, and Sombrieul with immense ivory-white buds, are old but still popular semi-double roses that, with Francisca Kruger, in autumn leaf coppery yellow and bronzy red about completed the list until Killarney, the famous Irish tea (or hybrid tea) made its appearance. The latter is strictly a single rose when wide open, but the bud is large and handsome and, even when half-expanded, has all the size and dignity of a double rose.

As was foreordained when all the facts in the case came for review before the President he forthwith ordered prompt, rather than deferred, action on the cases before the federal courts in California referred to in District Attorney McNab's appeal to him for official release. Equity and prudence counseled no other course. At the same time that he reversed the policy agreed upon by two of his department chiefs and advisers the President also defended them from "snap" indictment of their motives. Their discretion he could not affirm; their honor and integrity he would not join in attacking. Nor will the public, if it is wise or generous, at least until far more evidence is produced than is now available.

The commendable alertness of public opinion at the present stage of national history in disciplining recreant public officials who run counter to old and new standards of ethics no true patriot would have altered. But the crushing power of punishment now inherent in the people should be exercised by them with at least as much equity and fair play as when might was centralized in an autocracy or in an aristocracy.

No great strain on the imagination is necessary to conceive of a method by which all the facts of this particular controversy might have been laid before the President (and before the nation if necessary) without the protestants passing from the role of witnesses to that of judges. Subordinate officials have certain rights, even against their superiors, when it comes to issues of conscience and official duty. That is indisputable. But there are ways and ways of registering dissent and of making appeal to the higher authority.

On the other hand, the incident has its lessons for department heads and for all officials charged with the administration of justice. The American people are weary of delays in court procedure and are suspicious of those who counsel delay. Reacting from excessive deference paid by many generations to the rights of individuals before the law, they are now tending to insist upon abolition of multiplied precedents and safeguards which today seem anti-social in their net results. Pleas for postponement of trial based on considerations that are personal to either litigants or to their counsel now have less weight with society than they had a decade or two ago. Official action, if it is wise, takes account of the rising demand that justice regain its former attribute of "swift as well as sure." This demand is the more clamant when it is an issue involving protection of womanhood.

Impression
Made by Huguenot
Pioneers

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., celebrates this week the two hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of that town by a colony of French Huguenot refugees. There should be more than local interest in the event for though limited in number the French Protestant colonists of early America were "sifted wheat" like the Pilgrim fathers, and they and their descendants have to their credit the customary high ratio of efficiency as citizens and as producers of wealth noted wherever the Huguenots went, whether to Switzerland, Holland, or Great Britain. To measure precisely what France lost and what western Europe and America gained by the expulsion of these kinsmen of Calvin is impossible.

Mingling with their Dutch and English neighbors in the colony near the mouth of the Hudson these thrifty, high minded, civilized French settlers of New Rochelle and other towns in the region gave to the society of southern New York state and northern New Jersey a distinction that was more conspicuous then than it is now as compared with other regions. Wherever from Massachusetts on the north to the Carolinas on the south the Huguenot refugee came he or his descendants usually gained eminence. Sometimes it was for handicraft and patriotism combined as in the case of Paul Revere. Or it was for shrewdness in trade as in the case of Peter Faneuil. Or it was because of great legal ability and skill in diplomacy as in the case of John Jay. Or in a much later day and generation it found Ballou preaching religion, Thoreau setting forth individualism as a mode of living, and Lanier singing out in verse the ampler Americanism and finer social vision of his day.

Tax Rates
Show States
Are Growing
Costly

If AT ANY other time the citizen forgets that he is living under a government, he comes to a keen realization of the fact when the tax bill is presented. He is entitled then to comment upon the increase that the amount usually shows and to inquire as to the reason, an inquiry, however, that has too often only echo for answer. A greatly contributing cause to the swelling of the taxes in recent years is the mounting of state expenditure.

If there is a state among the forty-eight that is not showing increased spending with each year in which the Legislature meets, it is a rare exception. In some of them the growth can hardly be called by that name, it is a process of leaps and bounds.

Massachusetts presents a luminous instance of increase in state spending. A total tax of $8,000,000 is saved from being a surprise by the fact that it was forecasted in January and has throughout the Legislature's session been a warning presence, from which there was found no avenue of escape by any feasible exercise of economy. The greater state tax is simply inescapable. It is imposed by the widening activities of the commonwealth, the taking on of burdens that were unknown even a decade ago, and very materially by the assumption of charges that were formerly met by the municipalities, principally the care of dependents in state institutions. Ultimately it cannot matter that the state pays in full for the support of the institutions, instead of passing the burden along to the cities and towns on a basis of their supply of inmates—the total burden is not changed by a difference in apportionment. But there is lacking the least evidence that the relief of the municipalities from these charges has brought about a lessened local tax rate. Other ways of home spending have been found to fully offset this relief, and the larger state tax arrives to pile up the taxpayer's total.

Formerly, and until recently without question, the apportionment of the state tax in Massachusetts has followed local assessments. The present year marks an advance step in the application of a law of 1912 by which the local valuations are revised by the state tax department and their inequalities corrected so far as the state tax is involved. The thrift of local assessors in keeping down valuations with a view to getting a smaller award of the state tax is denied the free play that has helped to create taxpayers' paradises. The results are striking justification of the new rule. Boston, which pays almost exactly a third of the state tax, stands this year for an increase in its contribution of a little less than 24 per cent, while Brookline is asked for 37 per cent more than last year, Manchester, a North Shore town, gets 63 per cent increase; Swampscott, another of the same sort, faces 70 per cent more and Nahant, one of the towns of low local rates, sees its state contribution very nearly doubled.

These instances speak for an improved system and an approach to a fair division. The other variations in the state, such as increases of only 12 per cent in North Adams, 28 per cent in Worcester, 40 per cent in Springfield, 38 per cent in New Bedford, 55 per cent in Arlington, are partly a correction of the methods of local assessment and in a measure the result of the local growth in property, partly a penalty and partly an evidence of expansion. They all bear witness to a better equity in carrying the state burden.

There remains the need of study of state spending, to discover how it may be restrained, and of state means of revenue without this swelling local tax, the larger problem of the two. Public economy is not in vogue, there is only weak insistence that some ventures that seem necessary shall be denied out of consideration of the people who carry the burden. There is call for the legislators who will dare to economize.

One Mark

Where

Progress

Seems to Halt

This is admittedly an age of wondrous advancement. On all sides the impossible is being accomplished. Space and time are vanquished. The sea, the land and the air have almost ceased to offer further resistance to restless, imperious, dominating man. It is becoming a common saying that whatever it is necessary for man to do in the material world he can do, that there is no possible limit to the range of human achievement.

Hence the growing optimism and confidence of the period. People of all shades of thought are affected by it. They are no longer doubting. And yet, in one particular at least, it looks as if mankind—as distinguished from womankind—were stopped in its forward movement by an insurmountable stone wall.

Last year's straw hat, apparently, cannot be made to do. No amount of scrubbing, revolving, dyeing, pressing, seemingly, will make it do. For a little while after its removal from the scrubbing table, the electric whirler and the block it is full of promise—it has the appearance of having regained its newness—but no sooner is the money paid to the expert renovator than the hat begins to resume the pallor it had when released from winter storage.

It looks like a very simple matter, this thing of restoring last season's hat to its original tint. The task seems trivial in comparison with the great things accomplished on every side every day. But, evidently, it is an underrated task. Trousers that openly yearn for the old clothes man may be pressed and creased so that they will set fully as well as they did three years ago. As much may be said for coats and waistcoats. Scarfs can be brightened. Gloves can be made as good as new. Wonderful things may be done in a shoeblacking parlor for a shabby pair of patent leathers. In fact, there are few departments of activity in which more headway has been made than in that of cleaning, pressing, patching dyeing and restoring wearables. Yet last year's straw hat balks all genius, all effort. Do as you may with it, spend as many cents as you like upon it, have it scrubbed and whirled and ironed while you wait as often as you will, it is still last year's straw hat before you have gone a mile, and it looks it out of every mesh. There is no accounting for it now. Time possibly may solve the mystery, but it will not be wise to count upon it.

Fighting for Water in the Flood District

As this is written, farmers throughout a large extent of territory in the Mississippi valley more or less subject to inundation in the freshet season are struggling desperately, and from all accounts heroically, to save their crops from drought. Only a few months ago water in too great abundance was within their reach, it was so high as to cause very serious damage in some quarters; in time it receded, was carried through innumerable channels to the larger streams and river and finally found its way through the main artery of the valley to the gulf of Mexico and the Atlantic ocean. Only such of it as seeped into the earth was saved. Most of the flowing water in that territory today either comes from the mountains or is due to recent rains. Immense areas are dry and parched. In one state alone—Missouri—the farmers on 100,000 homesteads are fighting against odds to save their grain, fodder and feed crops.

Under a water storage system commensurate with the needs of the Mississippi valley there need be no lack of water at any season of the year; under an adequate reservoir system there need be no destroying freshets at any season of the year. The cost of floods and droughts for a few seasons is greater than would be involved in the construction of a reservoir and diversion system that would meet the need of generations. The saving to Missouri farmers in a single season by the application of flood-preventive and drought-preventive methods would more than meet its proportion of the cost required in the carrying out of a system of water storage for the valley.

These facts are now commonly known. They are as well known as are the facts relating to the recurrent disastrous and preventable droughts. The question is, how soon will they be put to proper use?

It cost but $9000 to carry on the equal suffrage campaign that recently scored a victory in the Illinois Legislature, and it was by no means a short one. Seasoned politicians of the other sex, evidently, have much to learn from the enfranchised ladies.

IN A RECENT editorial La Nacion of Buenos Aires, one of the leading newspapers of the southern continent, voices its approval of President Wilson's attitude in the recent Guatemalan financial complication. That the state department positively declined to intervene in favor of Guatemala with the foreign office in London La Nacion regards as a certain proof of the sincerity of President Wilson's reversal of dollar diplomacy and as an earnest of his loyalty in future dealings with the Latin-American republics. Since the friendly intervention of the United States had been asked by Guatemala herself, the state department in Washington, the paper thinks, might very well have seized the opportunity to extend its influence, under the egis of the Monroe doctrine, in a very definite manner, thereby turning Guatemala practically into a financial dependency of the United States. Resisting the temptation to revert to "continental imperialism" President Wilson also taught the South Americans "a salutary lesson to proceed exclusively on their own responsibility in the matter of international financial obligations."

Argentina Approves President's Course

It must be gratifying for the new administration in Washington to see how readily and unreservedly its Latin-American policy is acknowledged and appreciated by influential newspapers. There is something in the tone of that editorial which seems to point to the possibility of genuine cooperation between the United States and the leading republics of the south, in the matter of Pan-American policy, especially with regard to international complications over the smaller ones. Not that such a cooperation had not been attempted in the past with possibly a fair measure of success, but the impression has never been that the Latin partners were at all eager to join the power of the north.

There are well informed persons in Latin America as in the English-speaking countries who view the visit to the United States of Dr. Lauro Muller, the Brazilian minister of foreign affairs, in the light of an international event considerably transcending in importance that which, nominally at least, gave rise to it, viz., the South American voyage of the then secretary of state, Mr. Root. It is not possible at this time to place an accurate estimate on this return visit, but it is difficult to see how it can do otherwise than work in the direction of that Pan-American cooperation which with the opening of the Panama canal must become a foremost problem of the age.

Some of the recognized leaders among the women of Kansas, representative of the several sections of the state, have taken in hand the task of educating their sisters for the performance of the duties of good citizenship. Into this work no question or element of partizan politics is to enter. It is simply seen by the women at the head of this movement that the great body of the new voters are very much in need of instruction as to Kansas Women and Good Citizenship their civic responsibilities, and it is intended, simply, that they shall be given this instruction without any regard whatsoever as to how they shall vote. Women in Kansas have not in the past had any strong incentive for the acquisition of political knowledge; like their sisters in all the other states they have, as a rule, left governmental affairs entirely to men. Conditions have now changed, however, and if Kansas is to be benefited rather than injured by the extension of the franchise to women, the women of Kansas must learn how to make proper use of their enlarged freedom.

With this end in view a Good Citizenship League has been organized, and a committee of this body has just framed a program for the education of women voters which covers a wide range of subjects, such as public ownership of public utilities; work and duties of public utilities commissions, proposed amendments to the Kansas constitution, labor conditions, domestic economy, taxation, eleemosynary institutions, property rights of women, franchises, Kansas history, and so on.

Furthermore, it is the purpose to educate the women voters of Kansas with regard to political procedure, offices; general election laws and methods and the intelligent use of the ballot. The high ground is taken that Kansas is far more concerned in possessing a well-informed electorate than it is in the success at any single election of any person or any party. Instructed how to perform their duties as good citizens, the women are to be left to perform them according to their best judgment. Other states in which women have come into political power, and, in fact, all states, might well follow the example of Kansas in this particular. It will do no harm if the women of the non-suffrage states become as well informed as it is proposed to make their Kansas sisters, for even where women have not the franchise, and where they are not likely to have it for some time to come, they are in a position to wield a powerful moral influence in politics. It is essential that they shall know how

The Payne-Aldrich tariff law, whatever defects it may have had viewing it ethically or economically, surpassed all its forerunners in its sensible dealing with esthetics as related to taxation. There were men near the throne at the time who were amenable to arguments put forth by artists and by art-lovers, by producers and by importers not to mention buyers. Consequently a schedule conforming to sensible principles was worked out and passed, under which the treasury has prospered, the national store of art treasures from ancient and classic schools mounted phenomenally, and no essential national interests suffered harm. Why therefore any change is demanded in the Underwood-Wilson law it is difficult to see.

The history of American legislation as it has dealt with the interests of authors and artists is not one as creditable to lawmakers as it is to the altruistic and patriotic attitude of these promoters of the fine arts who in theory have most to gain pecuniarily by "protection." They usually have risen above the provincial, narrow point of view and have insisted on relatively free access by the public to sources of intellectual and emotional betterment.

Kansas will need 19,000 harvest hands, so that college men who are fond of the open can avoid a dull summer.
